verse

In deep shades of muff, a web is spun across the dimmed northern sky. In the web beneath a deceiving lab chorus
ring, a beauty does lie. Its configuration at times subtle, sublime amorphous to the touch. Yet during the darkness sharp, resilient,
intruding to the heart it can hurt much. In old times our ancients became scared, frightened by it. They could not face this allurements. less idiosyncratic, they made it. hidden their hearts of frigidity, the web's pattern. Reach farther, a god they made of it, unable to face the luridness of the web's nectar.
